Moldavite is part of the group of tektites, and comes from Moravia and the Czech Republic. It is a deep green but can also be pale green, or a greenish brown. Some people say it is an 'extraterrestrial' stone which melted as it descended through our atmosphere and blended with some of Earth's natural material, and some think it came from a meteor. The first Moldavites were found in 1787 in Czechoslovakia, by the Moldau River, which gave the Moldavite its name. It is our only other-worldly stone.

Legends surrounding Moldavite abound, and in my research about those legends, I found this interesting piece...author Robert Simmons writes, "More recently, Moldavite has been viewed as a relic of the legend of the Holy Grail. In some recountings, the Grail was said to be not a cup but a stone, and Emerald that fell from the sky. In other stories, the Grail cup was carved from the Emerald. The correspondences of the stone of the Grail and Moldavite are clear. The ancients called all clear green gemstones Emeralds and Moldavite is the only such stone ever to have fallen from the sky. In history, there was even a physical 'Grail' discovered and brought to Napoleon, who was disappointed to find it was green glass. But, of course, Moldavite is green glass. Another chalice, this one made of gold and adorned with Moldavites, was passed down through the centuries and disappeared during the Second World War. In the 1930s the famed artist, mystic Nicholas Roerich, compared a Moldavite...to the fabled stone of Shambhala, further asserting it was the same stone contained in the Holy Grail. Interestingly, the energetic effects of Moldavite parallel those attributed to the famed Grail stone." As a side note, there are some who believe the true Grail was neither a cup nor a stone at all.
